

RepRisk attends SRI in the Rockies Conference in New Orleans

Lauren Crockett, Operations Manager, and Robert Szigeti, North American Sales Representative, attended the SRI in the Rockies conference in New Orleans, Louisiana from October 2 to 5.

The SRI in the Rockies conference recognizes and encourages the efforts of people and organizations from North America and around the world working for social justice and environmental sustainability. The conference is designed to inspire innovation, support leadership efforts, and facilitate collaboration among those who seek to direct the flow of investment capital in transformative ways and to catalyze a shift to a more sustainable global economy.

Robert and Lauren attended panels on the significance of gender equality in the workplace and its importance to the success of a business model, as well as many interesting discussions about the significant impacts of water scarcity on industries which involve mining, alternative energy and natural gas exploration.

One of the major topics discussed was the current push in the US towards the extraction of shale gas through the process of 'fracking'. In the "Flaming Faucet" Panel discussion on fracking.
